"HAVE NO TIME TO VOTE"

FRAYED-OUT ARGUMENT ANSWERED BY ONE WHO KNOWS

Half an Hour a Year at the Most is All That the Act Will Demand From Her Home Duties.

"If given the ballot woman must necessarily neglect the great business of the home," is a statement of ten advanced by men who have taken ground against the amendment. Of course this is only another way of saying that woman's work is vastly more important than man's. No one ever questioned the fact that men have abundant leisure in which to discuss political questions and to cast their ballots. In making the first statement it must be admitted that home keeping is more important than home making. That being the case reason shows that women have the greatest interest in the home because of their responsibility in its maintenance. Leaving greater interest and more at stake everything that touches their life work must be of the utmost importance. What comes closest to the home than the many things that are decided by "arbitration of the ballot?"

Here is an answer to the "no time" query prepared by a brilliant woman suffragist:

"If she belongs to the well-to-do class and hires others to do her work she has time for whatever interests her mostly—only let those interests be noble! If she does her own housework she can take 10 minutes to stop on her way to market and vote once or twice a year. She can find half an hour for the newspaper and other means of information. She can talk with family and friends about what she reads. She does this now; she will then do so more intelligently, and will give and receive more from what he says and hears. If she does this 'out of reading and talking she will be better informed than the majority of voters are now."

"The duties of motherhood and the making of a home are the most sacred work of women, and the dearest to them, of every class. If casting an intelligent vote would interfere with what women only can do—and what, failed in, undermines society and government—no one can question which a woman must choose. But it cannot be shown that there are any large number of women in this country who have not the necessary time to vote intelligently, and it can be urged that a study of the vital questions of our government would make them better comrades to their husbands and friends, better guides to their sons and more interesting and valuable members of society. Women of every class have more leisure than men, are less tied to hours of routine; they have had more years of school training than men. All this makes ample the combination of public and higher duties."
